Hongkong, October 6th, to 3.

The recent somewhat amusing discussion with-regard to Amateur Sinologues, calls attention to the necessity for supplying a want which has of late years become very apparent both in Hongkong and at the Treaty ports. It is that of some means of officially examining students of Chinese, and awarding thom certificates on their attaining a certain. standard of competency." The chief difficulty suggested by the recent controversy was that of determining who are Amateur Sinologues, and who are entitled to be looked upon as professionals. It is the impossibility of es. during the afternoon, and added much to the first defondant also had a dagger, but he did not tablishing this fact which has left the door open to a vast amount of unwarranted pretentions to learning, and has afforded the highest encouragement to Amateur Sinologues. The outside public can judge only by very general report, and if a man lays out for it, it is by no means difficult to get up reputation for learning, which is in reality not possessed.

If, however, a system of examination were established, we should have the means of ascertaining; with some degree of accuracy; who were really scholars and who were merely sham ones; and a great stimulus would be given to those who intend to work in earnest to master Chinese, as they would then take a certain position at once, and would not be confounded with the too numerous class, who pretend to a vast knowhelge of the language, when in reality they know but very little about it.

- As before said, we recommend the measure both, for Hongkong and also for the ports. In the former, the Government would of course be the proper persons to take the matter in hand, and this would not be difficult in connection with the excellent schools which have been established, and by means of which examinations might easily be held periodically, and certificates granted to those who desired to obtain them, and who showed the requisite proficiency. The plan would also have the advantage of enabling the Government at times to pick up desirable men, for filling-either the post of interpreters or such other offices as require a knowledge of the Chinese language, while to those who are disposed to devote their time to studying Chinese in the colony, the system of grant ting certificates of competency would be very great boon, and would afford them? definite goal towards which to work, an ele energy and thoroughness to their studies which they would otherwise completely lack. To the public, it would be no small advantage to be able to choose men whose services might be required for translating, &c., from those who had certificates to show that they were men who could be relied upon. farther general advantage would also be obtained by tho colony, as it is greatly to its interests that there should be as many persons as possible who know Chinese resident among us This would be a great security against misinterpretation by Chinese, as they might be found out, and it would also be the means of increasing our information concerning the doings of the native population.

As respects the treaty ports, it is somewhat surprising that Mr. HART, who has always shown himself ready to adopt measures. tending to the practical advantage of the important Service under his direction, has not already hit upon a plan which could be easily organised by him, and which would clearly be in every way to the benefit of the Customs. It an examination départment of the service were organised, by means of which any foreign residents could obtain certificates of com- | man; one had about $100, defendant $60, potency in Chinese, he would always know and the other $40. SEVENTY-FIRST DAY.—12TH AUGUST Dr. Kenealy has now devoted three days to his discussion of the cross-examination of the Claimant in the Court of Common Pleas. He have claimed. SEVENTY SECOND DAY -15TH AUGUST. It may be remembered that on Monday last, immediately before the Court rose, one of the mry pathetically asked Dr. Kenealy whether he could "give any idea" how much longer his speech was likely to last. "No. I cannot, sir." was the somewhat cart reply, which was received by the jury with evident consternation. In default of definite information, we ventured yesterday to calculate that, at his present rate of progress, the larmed counsel would conclude his address somewhere about the 2nd of October. The result shows us to have been greatly mistaken. No sooner had the Court reassembled yesterday morning, than Dr. Kencaly, after adding to the computation as a feat of imagination which had outsoared Dante himself, announced that, although on Monday afternoon he had been unable to give even "an idea" of the probable length of his opening, he was yet now in a position to assure the jury that he, should probably conclude on Friday, and should, at the outside, only occupy a little of Monday morning, on which day his withesees had orders to be in readiness. news was received with manifest cheerfulness. and the day's proceedings, went very merrily, and with fewer remonstrances and interruptions than usual

Discontinuing his analysis of the cross-examination in Common Pleas, Dr. Kenealy turned his attention to the evidence given for the Crown on the matter of the tattoo marks, and proceeded to redeem his pledge, that he would smash the evidence as to the tattoo into a thousand pieces. His theory, briefly stated, is to the effect that Roger Tichborne was never tattooed at all; that the whole story of the tattoning by Lord Beliew was concected between the 5th June, 1871, on which day it was first discovered definitely that the defendant was not tattooed, and the 7th, on which day Mr. Bowker wrote to Lord Bellew. "The family are well aware that he was tattooed; and if you could ascertain when, where, and by whom he was so Kencaly's own cupheinistin -" is not the witness | plete understanding of the whole. It consists of truth," and the jury are invited to disbelieve him upon his oath. But, as will doubtless have Alexander the Great. The Greek is excellent, occurred to all who have carefully followed the case, Lord Bellow is by no means the only witness to the marks in question-the "R. C. T." and the cross, heart, and anchor. tattoord with certain blue devices upon one or other of his arms; and, in default of bitter. "family tradition" is admissible evidence of family matters. But, besides this, the tattoomarks have been deposed to by a number of witnesses against whom, unlike Lord Bellew, no possible imputation could be preferred. A typical witness of this class is Lady Dormer. who stated that she had seen the marks reneatedly; that she had an aversion to them; and that Roger, by way of tenzing her, was always pulling up his sleeve and saying, "Look here, Eliza, look here." It has excited some curiosity to know how Dr. Kenealy proposed to deal with evidence of this kind-whether he would pass it over, or whether he would denounce it as untrue. It was hard to see what alternative there was to these two consecs, ed doctor's brief. A SUNSET WALK. BY GEORGE COOPER.

Purple, gold and ruby tinta, Are fading in the sunless sky. And pearly, dim, uncertain glints Mark one lone star on high. The cricket's tiny bell is rung, The last song of the bird is sung.

Far away the din and fret-The daytime hurry, and the strife-The weary toil and and regret, Which haunt our daily life-Oh, far away these leave me now,

With sunset's kisses on my brow. Leaves, which all day idly tost, Now panse to listen for the Night, Fast riding with his radiant host. O'er hills of dying light. Around me falls the hush of prayer, And dimmer grows the pulseless air.

Pence and love on all descend ! Ob_surely, ip-au-hour-like-this: Kind heaven seems nearer earth to bend, -To-give-one good-night-kiss!-Fair home-lights now the wandorer sees, Like fire-flies, twinkle through the trees.

Loving ones return to him, And rosy checks with love-light glow; Fond hopes arise at twilight dim, In dreams of long ago. And all the joy sweet memory gives. Touched by the hand of aunset, lives.

The tranquil sunset of the soul, When all the jar of earth is past! When storms no longer round us roll, And heaven is near at last! We know, though faint, and fail we may Calm sunset ends the longest day.

A FAST YOUNG INDIAN. Public opinion, however, was in his favour, Whitehurst. and his four wives were marched off to his wigwam. Not only did the quadruply-married man obtain his brides, but the chiefs determined that a youth of such tender years capable of devising and accomplishing so extraordinarily bold an act, must be a person of discretion, and deserved a seat in the council among the warriors and medicine men,-

A RAILROAD TO BE PRAISED When I can testify well of any public instituition I always do so, and I have great pleasure in recording the fact, that the Great Northern Railway of France is the most careful and economical rallway in the world; not only does it travel slowly where there is snow. but also where there is not. The name of the stations are so confidently communicated, that nobody is tempted to get out, by which means many accidents are prevented. As to space, there is not an inch wasted. Eight people to eight places; and each of the eight passengers may bring in any luggage less than a lady's dress-box.
